

With college tuition costs rising each year, many students find themselves working extra jobs to avoid taking out loans. Glasgow natives Thomas Lyle and Jake Mansfield both 19 have taken a different route.

They started KRAM- Kentucky Roadside Agricultural markets- a business focused on growing and selling local produce. News intern JR Mahung with the full story:

{audio}<http://wcluradio.com/newscuts/0807kram.mp3>{/audio}

KRAM's hours are 10 AM to 6 PM on weekdays and 9 AM to 4 PM on Saturdays.