

A Kentucky lawmaker is refunding his legislative pay from the August Special Session to redraw legislative district lines. State Representative Jim Wayne (D - Louisville) was paid $1454 for the week-long session and has returned that money to the state treasury.

{audio}<http://wcluradio.com/newscuts/1010wayne.mp3>{/audio}

Wayne says the legislature was irresponsible in not passing the revamped district lines in 2012 and 2013 and it is a personal choice of his to refund the taxpayer money he was paid for not getting the work done on time. The special session costs taxpayers about $65,000 a day.